Fun, energetic professor who gets to know his students well enough to be concerned with their overall development in the course.it has by far been one of the most interesting classes I've have throughout my time at CSULA, although this class did involve a lot of work it was all interesting. Perhaps it wasn't the material that bothered me but the transition from quarters to semesters so the amount of work obviously increased. Happy holidays. (:

Prof. J was by far one of the best professors I've ever had, I really enjoyed how he taught the class and that was by making this class fun and interactive but very resourceful at the same time. I really liked how he didn't use an old fashion text book instead he used different books that allowed us to see political communication from a different perspective therefore allowing us to clearly understand it. He definitely gives the class his all and lets his students know what they need help with and what they can improve on. He also gave his students the opportunity to come to him whenever they need help or had questions. By far one of the best professors I've had throughout my CSULA career.

I believe this class is a great example of what GE required classes should be. Many times I leave a required class feeling as if I hadn't learned anything or disinterested an anything covered within the course. I learned many things in this course that I can take with me to other classes within my major and even outside of school. I believe the class felt like Professor Torres was genuine in his knowledge of the material and genuinely cared whether or not we learned the information.

I believe the section on Conflict of Vision was was a great part of the course as it is something you can take outside of the classroom and apply to everyday interactions. I think a little more time could be spent speaking about Gorgias. I believe I had surface level knowledge about the book but needed just a little more connection.

Really helpful professor. He knows his material and uniquely presented it, in a way that helped me understand the concept of the class better.
 Hell of a lot better than if we read off a textbook.
 Made learning in the class interesting.
 Flamboyant af when talking to the class and to people in general. Pretty cool and helpful professor overall.

Professor Torres is something else. He may be a good professor to some but to me he was very biased, had favorites in the class, his midterm and final was terrible due to it being so long where basically most of my class couldn't finish. He would put some people in the class down and would be somewhat rude in class. I started out not liking him very well and ended the course not liking him whatsoever. He needs to learn to be a professor before actually teaching.

The class is always interesting because the professor himself makes it interesting. The reading all came hand in hand with the papers that were in the syllabus. The professor is very flexible and works with students when they need help.

Professor Torres is by far the best professor I've have had because he is very intellectual in the subject and has expanded my knowledge when it comes to political science. Political science is not a subject you can sleep on because it contains a lot it information that is current to what is happening in our everyday lives. Professor Torres appreciates political science and that is why he goes out of his way to teach us what he knows. His course is rigorous without a doubt, but he makes all the information knowledge. He would often say if we met him halfway, he would help us to best of his abilities. Each book and reading he would assign during the duration of the course would be relevant to what he was teaching. What was truly baffling was what you learned once you connected all those books and reading. When connecting the reading you understood what political science was and what political communication meant. Professor Torres did an excellent job when teaching my peers and I what political science is. He challenged the course by making it difficult as time passed, but he did it to expand our abilities. The students at times would complain because they didn't understand, but professor Torres would reassure us and explain and then he would tell us why he would challenge us. He said the world is competitive and nothing will ever come easy which is why we have to understand that we have to expand and try harder. I understood that I had to become a better aspect of myself than I was before. His class environment was serious yet fun and I still passed as well as understood what was taught. I think he did beyond great.

I really learned a good amount of information in this class. Not only did it teach me about the communication of political science but as well as information one should know throughout some point in their lives. I really thought the constrained and unconstrained view really clarified as to why there is such thing as democrat or republican. I always wondered why people thought different regarding politics. Also about rhetoric as what noble rhetoric is and what is just and unjust. Lastly i really liked how in each section I learned something new that I will probably remember for the rest of my life and will help me understand concepts better.

I cannot praise this class enough. Among other things, the class was: challenging but fair, interesting, and worthwhile. Professor Torres, you were exceedingly easy to get into contact with and have done a fantastic job creating your class. You went above and beyond your career description by assisting me in finding an excellent internship. For that, I cannot thank you enough.
